

"All of the implementation for the students and teachers was taken care of, and they were accessing their digital environments."

Paul Zaccagnino,
School Librarian

EdTech makes it easy and simple for schools and students to manage and access individualized digital content using one platform from any device.

School Success Story Salesian High School

Salesian High School is a private, all-male Catholic school located in New Rochelle, New York. School Librarian Paul Zaccagnino, managed the school's digital implementation services, and expressed that finding an alternative to hardbound books was a priority. He said the school had concerns with how quickly textbooks were wearing out, as well as the fact that the books the students were carrying were simply too heavy.

Planning to retire, Paul needed to partner with a company who would continue to take care of the teachers and students after he left. His first step was to make the implementation process easy for his colleagues. He attended the National Catholic Educational Association Convention and Expo, where he found EdTech. From that point on, he knew Salesian would be in capable hands.

He collected the information needed to begin implementation with EdTech, and was surprised to find how simple the process was, saying, "All I had to provide were textbook ISBNs, and course numbers that I uploaded in a CSV." After providing this information, a representative from EdTech visited Salesian High School, to train the teachers and students on how to use digital books, publisher platforms and EdTech's app. Paul was astonished, saying, "All of the implementation for the students and teachers was taken care of, and they were accessing their digital environments."

In no time, students were enjoying their digital books. Paul noticed them using their books and documents on their tablets and laptops. "I see kids taking notes and highlighting terms in their book. When they don't understand a word, they highlight it and define it," he said. "They also have the capability of using the active links in the book to bring them to the site they need to go to."

The instant interaction that digital books provide has made the learning process easier for students as they study. Paul is pleased to have found a partner for implementation, and relieved that he can retire knowing that his school is taken care of, saying, "I am confident that passing everything on will not be an issue."
